We are thankful to El Plan for its work in developing and administering the survey to over 200 participants, and in analyzing the resulting data. The Autry welcomes ideas and input about potential uses that would be most beneficial for the community and could lead to a viable and sustainable future for this important historic site. The survey results are useful information that will contribute to the broader effort starting next year—led by the National Trust for Historic Preservation in partnership with the City and the Autry—that will reach out widely to the community to help define a solid future that honors the legacy of the city’s first museum.
